

good enough as far as it went. It proposed to abolish the tax on matches, on patent medicines and perfumeries, on all forms of banking business, and to reduce the taxes on tobacco and cigars. The trouble was, the bill did not go far enough. It did not reduce, to a single man, the army of tax-collectors; and it was put forward by the very committees which had devoted all its energies to prevent tariff reform. In a brief course of the debate, one Republican said his constituents would not tolerate a reduction of the tax on ron or steel sheets or plates, galvanized or coated by any process with zinc, spelter, or any alloy of those metals, commercially known as galvanized steel, iron or sheet steel.

After discussion he modified the amendment so as to make the rate one cent per pound, and later, at the suggestion of Mr. Morrill, offered it as a proviso at the end of the paragraph embracing boiler or other plate iron, sheet iron and black taggets iron, in this form: Provided, that on all such iron and steel objects.

Another hotel horror, as the man said.

As Jas. Green's hotel at Valley depot, W. Va. street, those citizens had coal haulers should make contracts at the world, or with Collins McInerney, now Valley railroad, West Tazewell street.
